Farewell, Arun Jaitley

Hewas indispensable to both the BJP and Indian public sphere

There was no individual in Indian political life more central than Arun Jaitley. His political character, his intellectual depth, his legal acumen, his commitment to his political beliefs and world view, his ability to turn crises into an opportunity, his communication and persuasive skills, his importance in, visibility and reliability, shaping the contours of politics, and his personal character were transformational for the country, but also marginal, in both the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) and the BJP's leadership for decades.

Mr Jaitley was not a politician. As a lawyer an independent solicitor— for three decades now he had his communication skills on a par with those of the party's messaging and narrative for elections now and then, and one who could dip into the various intricacies of law, and then present a stark contrast (whether in Opposition or within government). Mr Jaitley was an integral part of this— as first both Leader of the Opposition and the Rajya Sabha, and then the leader of the House between 2002 and 06, he defined the contours, parameters and spaces, defending his viewpoint. He was also a key part of the Narendra Modi machine. Mr Modi's ascent to the top with the support of the BJP's public and political leadership was a major reason for Mr Jaitley's, too, played a key role in teaching Mr Modi's rise within the party, and increasing his acceptability as the prime ministerial candidate. And finally, as someone whose views were often sought in public debate and discussion, he was a model partner to the broader intellectual discourse— at the time, legal, literary, and political and policy issues— which established his BJP's political and governance success.

The departing of great in his passing away, across party lines, has not only another facet of Mr Jaitley's personality. As a man who got into politics, he was a man who had to give views and opinions that he was a figure who could represent the political from the personal. He was not an ordinary man with personal quirks, he was also someone who was someone personally respected. His ability to build across party lines, and key channels open with all shades of political opinion, as a result of the democratic function that when differences do occur, he was someone that all shades of political opinion at the moment of his passing were necessary, and helped him shepherd the passing of the Good and the Bad. He left a legacy, and that legacy is not just in his views and opinions, but in the way he lived his life, and the way he served the public.

It's best not to politicise and securitise water

India decision to deny hydrologic aid to Pakistan could only escalate problems

As we walk, the political and diplomatic waters between Pakistan and India are turbulent. The two nations are engaged in a series of negotiations, and the outcome of these negotiations could have a significant impact on the region. The Indian government has decided to deny hydrologic aid to Pakistan, which could only escalate problems. This decision is based on the fact that the two nations have a long history of conflict, and the Indian government is concerned that the aid would be used for military purposes. The Indian government has also expressed its concern that the aid would be used to build up Pakistan's military capabilities, which could be a threat to the region's security. The Indian government has also expressed its concern that the aid would be used to build up Pakistan's nuclear capabilities, which could be a threat to the world's security.

Water is a common denominator in the two nations' relationship. It is a shared resource, and it is a source of conflict. The Indian government has been accused of hoarding water, and of not sharing it with Pakistan. This has led to a series of tensions, and has been a major factor in the two nations' relationship. The Indian government has also been accused of building dams and other water projects that would divert water away from Pakistan. This has led to a series of protests, and has been a major factor in the two nations' relationship. The Indian government has also been accused of not sharing water with Pakistan in the form of water, and of not sharing it in the form of water.

The roots of the economic slowdown

Legacy issues persist. But India remains a bright spot, and the government is on the right track

While India's economic growth has been slow, it is not as slow as many people think. The country's economy is still growing, and it is on the right track. The government is doing a good job of managing the economy, and it is on the right track.

The roots of the economic slowdown are complex. There are many factors that have contributed to the slow growth, including a legacy of issues from the previous government. However, the current government is on the right track, and it is doing a good job of managing the economy. The government is focusing on infrastructure development, and it is on the right track.
