TRAIN FIRM SEARCHES FOR MISSING RARE VIOLIN

British railway company Southeastern said it was helping renowned violinist Stephen Morris track down a 310-year-old violin he accidentally left on a train. The instrument, worth $321,000, was made by Roman master craftsman David Tecchler in 1709. Morris was due to play it in two concerts during the weekend.

15 killed as armed militants attack village

Ouagadougou: Gunmen killed 15 civilians in northern Burkina Faso over the weekend, security and local sources said Monday, in the latest deadly attack as the impoverished West African country battles a jihadist revolt. "On Saturday night numerous armed individuals attacked the village of Pobe-Mengao and kidnapped several residents, ransacked shops and carried away equipment," a local source said. A security source said "the lifeless bodies of 11 people were found on Sunday morning... probably the bodies of those abducted the day before".

Baghdadi's killing: Tip, raid, reveal

DEB RIECHMANN & AAMER MADHANI WASHINGTON, OCTOBER 28

THE HELICOPTERS flew low and fast into the night, ferrying US special forces to a compound where Islamic State leader Abu Bakr al-

Baghdadi was hiding in Syria. The raid was the culmination of years of steady intelligencegathering work—and 48 hours of hurry-up planning once Washington got word that Baghdadi would be at a compound in northwestern Syria.

The night unfolded with methodical precision and unexpected turns. This reconstruction is based on the first-blush accounts of US President Donald Trump and other administration officials eager to share the details of how the US snared its top target, as well observations from startled villagers who had no idea al-Baghdadi was in their midst.

Secret 2-day scramble

Events developed quickly once the White House learned on Thursday there was "a high probability" that Baghdadi would be at an Idlib province compound.

By Friday, Trump had military options on his desk.

Trump got back to the White House at 4.18 pm. By 5 pm, he was in the Situation Room to monitor the raid. They named it after Kayla Mueller, a humanitarian worker abused and killed by Baghdadi.

Panic, then death

Moments after the White House team had gathered, US helicopters took off from Al-Asad air base in western Iraq. Within hours, Baghdadi was dead.

The first inkling that something was afoot came when villagers saw helicopters swooping low on the horizon.

"We went out in the balcony to see and they started shooting, with automatic rifles. So we went inside and hid," said an unidentified villager. Next came a large explosion — Trump said soldiers blasted a hole in the side of a building because they feared the entrance might have been boobytrapped. Baghdadi fled into a network of underground tunnels that snaked through the compound.

The stout, bearded militant leader wore a suicide vest and dragged along three children as he fled from the American troops.

"He reached the end of the tunnel, as our dogs chased him down," Trump said. "He ignited his vest, killing himself and the three children."

'It was him'

Baghdadi's body was mutilated in the blast, and the tunnel caved in on him. To get to his corpse, troops had to dig through debris. That's when the raid turned into a forensics operation — and the special forces had come prepared. They had brought along samples of Baghdadi's DNA.

"It was him," Trump said.

After the American troops retreated, US fighter jets fired six rockets at the house, levelling it.

The reveal

He hinted at the successful military operation late Saturday by tweeting "something very big has just happened!'

Trump chose the Diplomatic Room to make his big announcement on Sunday.

In announcing al-Baghdadi's death, he leaned into comparing the successful operation with the 2011 mission to kill 9/11 mastermind Osama bin Laden.

While bin Laden orchestrated the deadliest militant attack in US history, the killing of Baghdadi was "the biggest there is", Trump said. Revelling in the moment, Trump spent more than 45 minutes speaking and taking questions about the raid. AP

CIA tipped off by IS chief's arrested wife, received intel from Kurds

ERIC SCHMITT, HELENE COOPER & JULIAN E BARNES WASHINGTON, OCTOBER 28

US PRESIDENT Donald Trump knew the CIA was zeroing in on the location for Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi when he ordered US troops to withdraw from northern Syria earlier this month, officials said Sunday.

But Trump's abrupt withdrawal order three weeks ago disrupted the meticulous planning underway, forcing the Pentagon to speed up the plan for the risky night raid, the officials added.

The planning for the raid began this past summer, when the CIA first got information about Baghdadi's general location in a village deep inside a part of northwestern Syria. The information came after the arrest of one of Baghdadi's wives and a courier, two US officials said.

Armed with that initial tip, the CIA worked closely with Iraqi and Kurdish intelligence officials in Iraq and Syria to identify more precisely Baghdadi's whereabouts. The Syrian and Iraqi Kurds, one official said, provided more intelligence for the raid than any single country. NYT

THE EUROPEAN Union agreed on Monday to delay Brexit by three months until January 31, acting to avert a chaotic UK departure just three days before Britain was due to become the first country ever to leave the 28nation bloc.

The decision was welcomed by politicians in the UK and the EU as a temporary respite from Brexit anxiety — but not by British Prime Minister Boris Johnson, who said just weeks ago that he would "rather be dead in a ditch" than postpone the UK's leaving date past October 31.

In the end, the choice was not in his hands. The UK Parliament forced Johnson to ask for a delay to avoid a no-deal Brexit, which would hurt the economies of both Britain and the EU. In a letter to European

Council President Donald Tusk,

Iohnson said that under UK law "I have no discretion to do anything other than confirm the UK's formal agreement to this extension." But he called the delay "unwanted" and said it was "im-

Researchers find a way to grow meat that doesn't look like mush in a lab

KNVUL SHEIKH

THE ALT-MEAT industry has created quite a sizzle, promising delicious burgers, steaks and even sushi that is grown from animal cells in the lab. But most cellular agriculture still looks like mush. The manufacturing process — which starts with animal muscle and fat grown from stem cells in petri dishes — is fine for making burgers, but it fails to provide the kind of texture needed for more sub-

Refining this technique and others like it could help more people, including serious carnivores, consider lab-grown meat as a sustainable, ethical alternative to meat raised for slaughter, MacOueen said.

In the body, groups of cells get physical support from an extracellular matrix, which is made up of water, collagen proteins and various nutrients. The extracellular matrix also provides essential cues for growth, cell orientation and differentiation.

"Muscle cells need a structure to grow on, the same way the walls of a building need a steel frame or a house needs a wooden skeleton," said Kevin Kit Parker, a bioengineer at Harvard and also a co-author of the study.

To mimic this cellular environment, Parker and his colleagues decided to make scaf-
