Sanders had heart attack, released from hospital, his campaign says

Las Vegas: Democratic presidential candidate Bernie Sanders had a heart attack, his campaign confirmed Friday as the Vermont senator was released from a Nevada hospital. The 78-year-old was at a campaign event Tuesday when he experienced chest discomfort and was taken to a hospital where he was diagnosed with a heart attack. The senator was transferred to Desert Springs Hospital Medical Center, where doctors inserted two stents to open up a blocked artery in his heart, according to a statement from the Las Vegas doctors.

Bangkok: AThai judge shot himself in the chest in front of a packed court after acquitting several murder suspects and decrying the kingdom's judicial system in an impassioned speech broadcast on Facebook Live. Kanakorn Pianchana, a judge at Yala court in the heart of the insurgency-battered Thai south, was delivering the verdict for five Muslim suspects in a gun murder case on Friday afternoon. He acquitted the group, delivered a courtroom plea for a cleaner justice system, before pulling out a handgun and shooting himself in the chest. He was taken to hospital and is out of danger, a government spokesperson said.

Govt: UN envoy replaced as she finished tenure

Islamabad: Pakistan has said Maleeha Lodhi was not sacked and was replaced with Munir Akram after the completion of her tenure as the country's permanent representative to the UN, according to a report. Prime Minister Imran Khan in a surprise move this week appointed Akram, known for his strident anti-India stand, as Pakistan's new permanent representative to the UN. The development came a day after Khan returned from New York, where he raised the Kashmir issue in his speech to the UN General Assembly.

TRUMP IMPEACHMENT PROBE

Investigators subpoena White House, seek records from Pence

NICHOLAS FANDOS WASHINGTON. OCTOBER 5

US HOUSE impeachment investigators widened the reach of their inquiry on Friday, subpoenaing the White House for a vast trove of documents and requesting more from Vice President Mike Pence in a bid to better understand President Donald Trump's attempts to pressure Ukraine to investigate his political rivals.

The subpoena, addressed to Mick Mulvaney, the acting White House chief of staff, calls for documents and communications that are highly delicate and would typically be subject in almost any White House to claims of executive privilege. If handed over by the Oct. 18 deadline, the records could provide keys to understanding what transpired between the two countries and what steps, if any, the White House has taken to cover it up.

The request for records from a sitting vice president is unusual in its own right, and Pence's office quickly signaled he may not comply. In a letter to Pence, the chairmen of three House committees conducting the impeachment inquiry wrote that they were interested in "any role you may have played" in conveying Trump's views to Ukraine. They asked for a lengthy list of documents detailing the administration's dealings with Ukraine, to be produced by Oct. 15.

Katie Waldman, Pence's press secretary, promptly said that "given the scope, it does not appear to be a serious request but just another attempt by the 'Do Nothing Democrats' to call attention to their partisan impeachment."

But that will not help Trump's case on Capitol Hill. Speaker Nancy Pelosi and the chairmen leading the inquiry have consistently warned the White House that noncompliance with their requests will be viewed as obstruction of Congress, a potentially impeachable offense. In addition to the new subpoena and request, a significant subpoena deadline for the State Department to hand over similar material in its possession was also scheduled to arrive by the end of the day. The State Department missed the deadline, a House official said late Friday, but department officials were in contact with the committees and lawmakers were still hopeful they would cooper-

'2nd intel official weighs complaint over Trump dealings with Ukraine'

MICHAELS SCHMIDT & ADAM GOLDMAN WASHINGTON, OCTOBER 5

A SECOND US intelligence official who was alarmed by President Donald Trump's dealings with Ukraine is weighing whether to file his own formal whistleblower complaint and testify to Congress, according to two people briefed on the matter.

The official has more direct information about the events than the first whistleblower, whose complaint that Trump was trying to get Ukraine to investigate his political rivals sparked an impeachment inquiry. The second official is among those interviewed by the intelligence community inspector general to corroborate the allegations of the original whistleblower, one of the people said.

The inspector general, Michael Atkinson, briefed lawmakers privately Friday about

Trump set to block

WASHINGTON, OCTOBER 5

THE TRUMP administration will deny visas to immigrants who cannot prove they will have health insurance or the ability to pay for medical costs once they become permanent residents of the United States, the White House announced Friday in the latest move by President Donald Trump to undermine legal immigration. Trump issued a proclamation, effective Nov 3, ordering consular officers to bar immigrants seeking to live in the US unless they "will be covered by approved health insurance" or can prove that they have "the financial resources to pay for reasonably foreseeable medical costs." In the proclamation, Trump justified the move by saying that legal immigrants are far more likely than US citizens to lack health insurance, making them a burden on hospitals and taxpayers in the United States. The surprise order is the latest step in a long effort by Stephen Miller, the President's top immigration adviser, and others in the administration, to limit what they consider the financial burdens of allowing immigrants into the United States.

THE BAN on giving visas to immigrants who cannot prove they'll get health insurance within 30 days of entering the US does not apply to those already in the US. However, it is likely to affect plans that US residents may have to bring their parents, spouses or other relatives from outside the country unless they have insurance that covers these family members. The rule, which is set to come into force on Nov 3, is almost certain to face legal challenges. Implementing the rule is also expected to be a logistical challenge as thousands of officials will have to be taught in a short period of time how to determine if an immigrant has the capacity to get health insurance.

Govt says Friday violence justified use of emergency law

FELIX TAM & GREG TORODE HONG KONG, OCTOBER 5

HONG KONG fell eerily silent on Saturday, with the subway and most shopping malls closed in an unprecedented shutdown of one of the world's biggest commercial centres after the government invoked emergency measures to curb months of unrest.

Hundreds of anti-government protesters defied a ban on face masks and took to the streets across the Chinese-ruled city earlier in the day. But by evening they had largely dispersed in preparation for bigger marches planned for Sunday.

closed early after a night of chaos in which police shot a teenage boy and protesters torched businesses and metro stations.

Protests had erupted on Friday across the former British colony hours after its embattled leader, Carrie Lam, invoked colonial-era emergency powers for the first time in more than 50 years to ban the use of face masks demonstrators have been using to hide their identities.

The night's "extreme violence" justified the use of the emergency law, Beijing-backed Lam said in a TV address Saturday.

"The extreme violence clearly illustrated that Hong Kong's public safety is widely endangered. That's the concrete reason that we had to invoke emergency law yesterday to introduce the antimask law," she said.

Undeterred by the ban and transport shutdown, several hundred pro-democracy protesters many wearing masks – marched through the normally bustling shopping district of Causeway Bay on Saturday, but there was no repeat of Friday's violence. Other groups gathered in Sheung Shui close to the border with mainland China and in the busy shopping and tourist district of Tsim Sha Tsui. "We felt we had to get out and show our basic right to wear a mask," said Sue, a protester. REUTERS from Afghanistan's 18-year war. Khalilzad has been in Islamabad for much of the week meeting with senior government officials in what the US State Department described as followup meetings he held in New York during last month's UN General Assembly session. At the time he met Pakistani Prime Minister Imran Khan, who has been calling for a resumption of peace talks. The Taliban delegation led by

Mullah Baradar — one of its more powerful members — arrived separately in the Pakistani capital for meetings with government officials they said were being held to discuss a wide range of political issues relating to the more than 1.5 million Afghans still living as refugees in Pakistan.

Baradar was arrested in Pakistan in 2010 in a joint Pakistani-CIA operation after he secretly opened peace talks with the then-Afghan President Hamid Karzai, attempting to sideline Pakistan and against the US strategy at the time, which did not support talks with the Taliban.

In 2018, Baradar was released from jail to facilitate talks after

Paralysed man walks again with brain-controlled exoskeleton

KATE KELLAND LONDON, OCTOBER 5

A MAN paralysed from the shoulders down has been able to walk using a pioneering four-limb robotic system, or exoskeleton, that is commanded and controlled by signals from his brain.

With a ceiling-mounted harness for balance, the 28-vear-old tetraplegic patient used a system of sensors implanted near his brain to send messages to move all four of his paralysed limbs after a two-year-long trial of the whole-body exoskeleton.

The results, published in The Lancet Neurology journal, bring doctors a step closer to one day being able to help paralysed patients drive computers using brain signals alone, according to researchers who led the work. But for now, the exoskeleton is purely an experimental prototype and is "far from clinical application", they added.

"(This) is the first semi-invasive wireless brain-computer system designed... to activate all four limbs," said Alim-Louis Benabid, a neurosurgeon and professor at the University of Grenoble, France, who co-led the trial. He said previous brain-computer technologies have used invasive sensors implanted in the brain, where they can be more dangerous and often stop working.

In this trial, two recording devices were implanted, one either side of the patient's head between the brain and the skin, spanning the sensorimotor cortex region of the brain that controls sensation and motor function. REUTERS

against Nepal's ex-Speaker over rape allegations

NEPAL POLICE on Saturday registered a case against the former Parliament Speaker Krishna Bahadur Mahara, who has been accused of raping a member of the parliamentary staff, according to a media report.

Police lodged an FIR after receiving a formal complaint from the woman, The Himalayan Times reported.

Police said they have filed a case of attempt to rape against the former Speaker.

BRITISH ROYAL SUES TWO TABLOIDS OVER ALLEGED PHONE-HACKING

Prince Harry goes to battle with tabloids, rupturing old relationship

BENJAMIN MUELLER LONDON, OCTOBER 5

PRINCE HARRY has started legal proceedings against the owners of two British tabloids over accusations that they hacked his phones, Buckingham Palace confirmed Friday, opening a new front in a remarkable crusade against the British press.

Coming at the end of a 10-day royal tour of southern Africa that was lavishly covered by the British news media, Harry's broadsides rankled some royal insiders and stunned longtime palace observers. They amounted to an unusually public rupture in an old, symbiotic relationship, one that shatters a longtime royal mantra: "Never complain, never explain."

The legal claims address allegations that the tabloids illegally intercepted Harry's voicemail messages, perhaps as far back as in the early 2000s, British news reports suggested.

Those accusations could potentially excavate a phone-hacking scandal of that period that touched a vast number of victims, eventually leading to the conviction of a tabloid editor, the shutdown of a popular newspaper and sweeping changes to the rules governing news coverage in Britain.

Harry's wife Meghan had sued a tabloid days earlier. AP

Harry's claims were brought last week against the owners of The Sun and The Daily Mirror, according to court filings. Reach PLC, which owns The Mirror, declined to comment Friday night. A message left for Rupert Murdoch's News Group Newspapers, which owns The Sun and published the News of the World, was not immediately returned. But the claims were only one part of a combative campaign by Harry and his wife, Meghan, the Duchess of Sussex, to highlight what Harry has described as the "relentless propaganda" and "continual misrepresentations" of the tabloid press.

The newspapers, he warned in an emotional 10-paragraph statement earlier this week, threatened to repeat the suffering inflicted by the tabloids' treatment of his mother, Diana, Princess of Wales.

She was hounded by the paparazzi for years, especially toward the end of her marriage, and she died in 1997 in a car crash in Paris, as her driver tried to elude photographers. "I've seen what happens when someone I love is commoditised to the point that they are no longer treated or seen as a real person," Harry wrote this week. "I lost my mother and now I watch my wife falling victim to the same powerful forces." Meghan, known as Meghan

Markle when she worked as an actress, has faced an abundance of unflattering coverage, and Harry and others have accused the news media of drawing on racist attitudes about the relation-edly stewed over more straightforward criticism, like that for the 2.4 million pound, or $3 million, price tag for taxpayer-funded renovations to their house. Several days after Harry
