Not in the pink of health

The colour of the ball & conditions may bring the teams closer, but Bangladesh's decline doesn't promise an equal contest

SHAMIK CHAKRABARTY KOLKATA, NOVEMBER 21

BANGLADESH HAVE been playing Test cricket for nearly two decades now. But rather than improving, they have been on a slippery slope of late. Yes, they are without two of their most experienced players for this tour — Tamim Igbal and Shakib Al Hasan. Then again, Shakib played the oneoff home Test against Afghanistan in September, a match Bangladesh lost by 224 runs. They are regressing as a Test side because they seemingly don't put the long form on a pedestal.

If anyone tries his hand at a combined India-Bangladesh XI, even the die-hard Bangladesh fans will not react angrily to an all Indian line-up. Even if an extra batsman is added, Hanuma Vihari, who is not getting a game after scoring a couple of half-centuries and a hundred in the West Indies, will get in. Mushfigur Rahim will get an honourable mention at best.

A pink-ball Test, however, poses a different challenge. Its unpredictability and the relative inexperience of the players from both sides with regards to playing a daynight Test could bridge the gap a bit, although it hardly puts the teams at par. Player by player, India are far superior. Here are a couple of examples: Even without Jasprit Bumrah, the Indian pace attack comprising Mohammed Shami, Ishant Sharma and Umesh Yadav is rated as arguably the world's finest in any conditions. None of the Bangladesh seamers — Abu Jayed, Ebadat Hossain and Mustafizur Rahman (if he plays) — has bagged a Test five-for yet. The 11 players who turned up for the visitors in the first Test at Indore have 21 Test hundreds between them. Virat Kohli alone has 26.

Still, conditions for a day-night Test and the pink ball might leave the door ajar for Bangladesh. Even Kohli admitted that handling the pink ball at times could be pretty

"In general, if you haven't played with the pink ball it will be challenging throughout the game. It would require more concentration, solid technique and more compact game compared to the red ball purely because in the longer format, the ball does a lot more than the white ball. And not having a great visibility and the ability to pick that colour make it even more difficult," the India captain said on match eve.

When a player of Kohli's pedigree says the pink ball could leave batsmen confused in terms of judging the off-stump, while the pace of the ball through the air is a bit disconcerting, lesser mortals would struggle even more.

"The decision-making has to be very precise, like the idea of off-stump... Even when we practised yesterday, we felt as if the ball is far but it hits you very quickly. The extra glaze of the ball is making it travel faster. It hits the hand hard. I was surprised with the fielding sessions; how in the slips the ball hit your hand so hard... It almost felt like a heavy hockey ball, those synthetic balls we would play with when we were younger... the throws took a lot more effort than the red ball do to reach the 'keeper. And again, dip perception was very difficult when the ball was in the air so during the day, high catches will be very difficult. I think we have to be very precise and our skills will be tested in this Test," Kohli said.

The majority of the Bangladesh batsmen don't have techniques that a pink-ball, daynight Test demands. Maybe, a strong-arm approach would serve them better. A few agricultural boundaries, a couple of topedged sixes, and there would be runs on the board. But to start with, their bowlers must raise their game. At Indore, they bowled boundary balls for fun. Here, conditions will make their job easier if they show discipline and try to keep the Indian batsmen in check. Dot balls build pressure. Bangladesh must stick to basics if they want to put the hosts under pressure.

And they must believe in their abilities. Bangladesh captain Mominul Haque's body language at the pre-match press conference didn't inspire confidence. He was asked if his team could cause an upset at Eden Gardens. "No, no, no," he replied with a sheepish smile.

White ball priority

One of the reasons why Bangladesh have failed to grow as a Test team is that their structure and itinerary give precedence to limited-overs cricket. The pink-ball Test starting Friday would only be their seventh long-form fixture in the last one year. Going ahead, they will play a few more, thanks to the ongoing World Test Championship. But Bangladesh must make the game's purest format their top priority if they want to become a serious Test nation.

"I can't speak for another team, another board; how they look at Test cricket. But from our point of view, from the BCCI's point of view, the only discussion we have had over the last two-three years is how we can have Test cricket right up there. And that takes the commitment of the board, firstly, and the total commitment of the players. If you look at how exciting as a team we have been over the past two-three years, it tells you why people come and watch us play as well. It's a partnership of the board and the players," Kohli said.

"If you look at our contract system as well, a lot of importance has been given to Test cricketers. So, all things have to coincide and every Test nation that has done that have teams that are playing strong Test cricket and their hearts and their minds are totally in sync with keeping Test cricket on top. You can't just tell the players you have to be committed to playing Test cricket but contractually we are not going to do anything for you."

Bangladesh, and a few other Test-playing countries, would do well to take a leaf out of India's book.

Day-night Tests can't be the only way: Kohli

SHAMIK CHAKRABARTY

KOLKATA, NOVEMBER 21

VIRAT KOHLI doesn't want day-night Test cricket to become the long-form's staple diet. He feels any move in that direction will dilute the sanctity of the game's purest format. "This shouldn't become the only way Test cricket is played. Because, then you are losing out on that nervousness of the first session in the morning. You can bring excitement to Test cricket, but you can't purely make Test cricket based on entertaining people. The entertainment of Test cricket lies in the fact that the batsman is trying to survive the first session, the bowlers trying to set up a batsman; if people don't respond to that, too bad," Kohli said on Thursday.

The hype around India's first-ever daynight Test is going through the roof. Kolkata's centre square has turned pink. Bangladesh Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina and West Bengal Chief Minister Mamata Banerjee will jointly ring the Eden bell to start the second Test.

Kohli compared the build-up with the India versus Pakistan World T20 fixture at this venue in 2016. "We are excited about the pink-ball Test anyway. The last time Eden had such a buzz, such excitement, was before the India-Pakistan T20 game (in 2016). There too you had VIPs and they were felicitated and the stadium was packed. I think the atmosphere will be similar. It can be daunting, intimidating, but very exciting as well.

"As it is, playing with the pink ball is not that easy and bowlers will get a boost. I think the first hour will be very exciting because energy levels will be very high and the public will get what they paid for. Obviously, this is a landmark occasion in Indian cricket, and we are lucky that we are part of this start." Test cricket is not in the pink of health.

Save England and Australia, matches are usually played before empty stands. The ICC has introduced the World Test Championship, but the global body so hasn't done any hardselling to promote the event. The very idea of the pink-ball, day-night Test cricket is to draw crowds to the long-form. Even BCCI president Sourav Ganguly is of the view that day-night Test cricket is the "way forward". Kohli, however, put things in perspective.

"If I don't like Test cricket, you can't push me into liking it. If someone gets excitement or boost from watching the battle between bat and ball and a great session of Test cricket, in my opinion those are the people that should come and watch Test cricket."

Kohli called for bringing "more system" into the scheduling of Test matches to make the format spectator-friendly. He was categorical that day-night Test could be a happy detour, not the actual journey. "I think this (day-night Test) can be a oneoff thing (in a series), it should not be a regular scenario."

Open to playing D-N Tests abroad Eden has set the ball rolling, and Kohli's team are now open to playing day-night

Tests away from home as well. But adequate preparation time is a pre-requisite. "One before the Test could be a pink-ball practice game. If it's second or third Test, I would ideally like to have a longer break between the two Tests and have a practice game before the pink-ball Test whenever that is, obviously under lights. It can't be a pink-ball practice tour game before the series and the Test is actually the third game

That wouldn't make any sense," Kohli said. Last year, India had refused to play a daynight Test at Adelaide. But as Ganguly said he received a positive feedback from the captain "in three seconds", when he proposed that the Eden Test be a pink-ball affair. So what changed? "The thing was to experience the pink-ball Test in our own condition first...Then eventually going on to playing pink-ball Tests anywhere in the world. It can't be a sudden thing. This one, we had been talking about for a while," the skipper explained.

Naseem, 16, makes debut, Pak all out for 240

NOVEMBER 21

MITCHELL STARC took four for 52 as a middle-session blitz and some late new-ball fireworks helped Australia dismiss Pakistan for 240 to bring a close to the opening day of the first Test in Brisbane on Thursday. Pat Cummins took three wickets (3-60) and the third quick, Josh Hazlewood, grabbed two as the Australian bowlers took the honours on a sunny day at the Gabba.

Pakistan's Asad Shafiq offered most resistance to the barrage from the Australian pace battalion with a fine knock of 76 before he was ousted by a Cummins delivery that removed his middle stump. Left-armer Starc took the second new ball in the final hour of the day and made good use of it, dismissing Yasir Shah (26) with a trademark yorker and Shaheen Shah (0) in successive deliveries to put himself on a hat-trick.

Naseem Shah, the 16-year-old fast bowler who was playing his first Test, faced the next delivery and, without appearing to know much about it, managed to keep the ball from hitting his stumps with a thick inside edge. The teenager was the last batsman to depart, caught and bowled by Starc for seven to bring an end to a day that ebbed and flowed with long periods of Pakistani resistance punctuated by bursts of wickets.

"In the end, not a bad result," said Australia captain Tim Paine. "We weren't quite at our best in that first session, we thought we bowled a bit short ... But apart from that we stuck to the task and got better as the day went on."

After losing the toss, Australia had been frustrated by an opening stand of 75 from Azhar Ali (39) and Shan Masood (27) in a partnership that lasted throughout the first session and into the second. The Australian quicks finally found their length, however, and removed both in three deliveries before swiftly adding the wickets of Haris Sohail and Babar Azam for one run apiece.

That spell of four wickets at the cost of three runs had the tourists rocking and a rout looked in order when Iftikhar Ahmed departed for seven to leave Pakistan on 95-5. breakthrough when he dismissed Mohammad Rizwan for 37 as the replays, when reviewed, showed what looked to be a no ball.

"I look at the scoreboard, it says a wicket," Cummins added. "I'll take it but I was really nervous until they put the finger up."

Asad clearly enjoys playing Down Under, however, and backed up centuries in Pakistan's two tour matches at a ground where he scored 137 when the tourists came close to chasing down an unlikely victory in 2016. Reflecting the discipline that the openers had earlier employed, he brought up his 24th test half century in a partnership of 84 with Yasir before Australia took the new ball and seized the day.

"We are not too unhappy but it could have been a lot better," said Pakistan bowling coach Waqar Younis. "The first session we thought would be difficult we got through pretty well, but then we gave it away. We need a really good session tomorrow to be in the game."

BRIEF SCORES: Pakistan first innings 240 in 86.2 overs (Asad Shafiq 76, Azhar Ali 39, Mohammad Rizwan 37; Mitchell Starc 4/52, Pat Cummins 3/60, Josh Hazlewood 2/46) v Australia at the Gabba.

'Freak' Stokes torments New Zealand once again

Mount Maunganui: New Zealand targeted the wicket of "freak" Ben Stokes on Thursday as they battle to get back into the first Test against England at Mount Maunganui. The honours were even when the New Zealandborn Stokes went to the middle just before tea on day one with England 120 for three. But by stumps, with Stokes in imperious form, the score had doubled and England will resume on Friday on 241 for four, with the 28-year-old all-rounder unbeaten on 67.

"He's a special talent. He's a bit of a freak at times," New Zealand short-ball specialist Neil Wagner said after Stokes clubbed his bouncers four times to the boundary.

Stokes has tormented New Zealand this year after he played a key role in England's nail-biting victory on boundary countback in the 50-over World Cup final in July.

As well as dispatching Wagner's short stuff, he also showed a liking for the fuller delivery when he took four boundaries off successive balls from Trent Boult, including one that burst through the hands of the usually reliable Ross Taylor at first slip. It was a drop that frustrated the New Zealanders who had earlier seen opener Rory Burns survive three chances including a waist-high edge that went between Taylor and Tom Latham in the slip cordon. However, Wagner believed that despite England going into day two with six wickets in hand, the game was not out of
