The government must focus on its primary business: to prevent religious-based violence, oppression and discrimination

How to rescue genuine secularism

IT'S THERE! It's obvious why so many cry to scale Everest—but the safety protocol must be tightened

Mount Everest, the world's highest peak at 8,848 m above sea level, with a steep vertical drop of about 1,000 m from the peak to the valley, and high winds, extreme cold, and the permanent ice that lies at the top, is a challenging mountain to scale. However, with the right safety protocol, it is possible to reach the summit. The key is to have a clear and defined plan, to follow a protocol, and to have a team that is well-prepared and trained. The Everest expedition is a test of the limits of human endurance and resilience, and it requires a strong leader to guide the team to success.

After the debacle

The intemperate vitriol and death threats hurled at Mr. Narendra Modi, his cabinet ministers and their families by Chief Minister Bhanwari Singh, are a worrisome sign that the country is moving away from the path of secularism. The government must take strong action against those who spread hate and violence, and ensure that the rule of law is strictly enforced. The government must also take steps to prevent the spread of fake news and misinformation, which can fuel violence and hatred. The government must also take steps to ensure that the rights of all citizens are protected, regardless of their religion or other characteristics. The government must also take steps to ensure that the justice system is fair and impartial, and that all citizens are treated equally under the law.

Secularism

Indian democracy depends on secularism, which is the principle that all citizens are treated equally, regardless of their religion. Secularism is a fundamental principle of Indian democracy, and it is essential to ensure that all citizens are treated equally under the law. Secularism is also important for maintaining social harmony and preventing violence and hatred. The government must take strong action against those who spread hate and violence, and ensure that the rule of law is strictly enforced. The government must also take steps to ensure that the rights of all citizens are protected, regardless of their religion or other characteristics. The government must also take steps to ensure that the justice system is fair and impartial, and that all citizens are treated equally under the law.

Media reporting

Media reporting is important for maintaining transparency and accountability in government. The government must take strong action against those who spread hate and violence, and ensure that the rule of law is strictly enforced. The government must also take steps to ensure that the rights of all citizens are protected, regardless of their religion or other characteristics. The government must also take steps to ensure that the justice system is fair and impartial, and that all citizens are treated equally under the law.

The government must focus on its primary business: to prevent religious-based violence, oppression and discrimination

The government must focus on its primary business: to prevent religious-based violence, oppression and discrimination